Billionaire Bilderberger Backed Paul

By Michael Collins Piper

A strange item has been making the rounds relating to the beloved GOP Texas populist Rep. Ron Paul. Following the recent meeting in Virginia of the Bilderberg group, many of Paul's supporters were rocked by an unexpected revelation.

It turns out that the billionaire founder of the online financial organization Paypal, Peter Thiel — an outspoken libertarian — who donated $2.7 million to a "super PAC" supporting Paul's presidential campaign, not only showed up at Bilderberg, but Paul's biggest backer was actually one of Bilderberg's key members, serving on the "steering committee" of the secretive clique of bankers, industrialists, press lords and others who meet yearly under the auspices of the Rothschild dynasty and their junior partners, the Rockefellers.

So while some at Bilderberg don't wish Paul well, at least one thinks highly of him. Even within Bilderberg there are differences of opinion.

Just after Bilderberg, Paul's increasingly errant son, Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.), distressed many by endorsing Mitt Romney, a fervent internationalist, unlike the senior Paul. While some think young Paul was threatened, others say that's unlikely: A little opposition to their overall plans only strengthens the appearance of democracy.

Michael Collins Piper is the author of Final Judgment, the controversial "underground bestseller" documenting the collaboration of Israeli intelligence in the assassination of John F. Kennedy.
